4. A game; see below.

Lin. At Haxey, a game called 'the hood' is played annually on Jan. 6, in commemoration, it is said, of the loss and recovery of her hood by a certain lady of the Mowbray family many centuries ago... The hood, which consists of a stiff roll of leather, is thrown up in the middle of the open field, on the borders of which are posted four official players, called 'boggans'... whose office it is to prevent the carrying away of the hood from the field, N. & Q. (1883) 6th S. vii. 147; In the parish of Epworth a similar game is played under the same name but with some variations. The hood is not here carried away from the field, but to certain goals, against which it is struck three times and then declared free. This is called 'wyking' the hood, which is afterwards thrown up again for a fresh game, ib. 148; GOMME Games (1894) 221. n.Lin.[1] Played at Haxey, in the Isle of Axholme, on the sixth of January. 'The hood is a piece of sacking, rolled tightly up and well corded, and which weighs about six pounds. This is taken into an open field, on the north side of the church, about two o'clock in the afternoon, to be contended for by the youths assembled for that purpose. When the hood is about to be thrown up, the plough bullocks or boggins, as they are called, dressed in scarlet jackets, are placed among the crowd at certain distances. Their persons are sacred, and if amidst the general row the hood falls into the hands of one of them the sport begins again. The object of the person who seizes the hood is to carry off the prize to some public-house in the town, where he is rewarded with such liquor as he chooses to call for,' STONEHOUSE Isle of Axholme, 291.

HOOREN, sb. Or.I. A disgust. (Jam.), S. & Ork.[1]

HOORIKOORIS, sb. Sh.I. In phr. in the hoorikooris, in a sulky, offended state of mind.

'He's lying i' de hoori-kooris' is originally applied to a person half-awake and half-asleep in the morning, before getting out of bed, and as he is then generally sulky, the expression is most often applied in this latter meaning. We find both words also in the expression: 'To sit oorin-koorin (nodding, half-asleep) ower de fire,' Jakobsen Dial. (1897) 39.

[Oor or ouri, ON. ōrar, a senseless state, see oorie + koor, a state between waking and sleeping, Jakobsen (l.c.).]

HOORIP, adv. s.Chs.[1] At a great rate or speed. Also used subst. and attrib.

Commonly used of boiling water—bey·lin óo··rip [beilin' hoorip]. The phr. 'at the hoorip,' 'with a hoorip,' are also frequent. Or, as adj., 'at th' hoorip gallop.' Uwd —— z os kóo·m tae·rin ûlŭngg ŭt)dh óo··rip· gy'aal·ŭp [Owd ——'s hoss coom tearin' alung at th' hoorip].

HOO-ROO, sb. Yks. Lan. Chs. Der. War. Also in form howrow Lan. [ū··rū.] 1. A hubbub, noise, tumult.

w.Yks.[2] You never heard such a hooroo in all yer life. Lan. They used to feaw eawt un kick up the dule's own howrow, Staton Loominary (c. 1861) 112. s.Lan. Bamford Dial. (1854). Chs.[1], nw.Der.[1] War. Hoo-roo, the devil's to do, Prov. (Hall.); War.[4] What a hooroo they be making, and all about nothing, I be sartain.

2. A fête, public rejoicings of any kind.

s.Chs.[1] Aas·t ey·ŭrd ŭ dhis· óo·róo ŭz iz góo·in bey ŭt Aak·n? [Hast heeard o'this hooroo as is gooin bey (=take place) at Acton?]

3. A kind of cake, baked in a pan, prepared for special occasions.

s.Chs.[1] Wi)m góo·in in fŭr ŭ reg·ilŭr jùngk·itin, ŭn fŭr aav·in ŭ óo·róo bai·kt i dhŭ pon, ún ahy noa·)nŭ wot els [We'm gooin' in for a regilar junkettin', an' for havin' a hooroo baked i' the pon, an' I knowna what else].

HOORRO, int. Sh.I. In phr. like hoorro, with spirit, spiritedly.

HOOSAMIL, sb. Sh.I. [hū·sǝmil.] A road between or past houses. S. & Ork.[1]

Hence Hoosamillya, adv. from house to house.

'To geng hoosamillya' is to go among the houses, carrying gossip from the one to the other, Jakobsen Dial. (1897) 43; The young lads [at Hallowmas] banded themselves together in squads and went hoosamylla (from house to house) as maskers, commonly called gröliks, Spence Flk-Lore (1899) 189.

[Hoosa, houses + millya, milli, between, among, Jakobsen (l.c.). Millya, a form of Norw. dial. millom, for the numerous variants of which see Aasen.]

HOOSAPAAIL, sb. Sh.I. The head. S. & Ork.[1] Cf. hushapan.

[Hoosa, ON. hausa- (in comp.), hauss, the skull, cranium, the head of beasts (Vigfusson); paail, Norw. dial. paale, a pole, stake, post (Aasen).]

HOOSBIRD, see Hosebird.

Hence Hooset hunt, phr., see below.

Brks.[1] When persons are believed to be guilty of incontinence, men and boys assemble for a 'Hooset Hunt'; they take with them pots or pans or anything wherewith to make discordant noise, and this they call 'Rough Music,' they also carry the 'Hooset' on a pole. On arrival at a house to be visited, the 'Rough Music' is vigorously played, and the 'Hooset' shaken in front of all the windows, and even poked into them if any be open.

2. A serenade of rough music, got up to express public disapproval of flagrant immorality, or of marriages where there is great disparity of age.

Wil.[1] n.Wil. 'What's that noise?' 'Oh, there's a hoosset going on up the street' (E.H.G.).

3. v. To take part in a 'hooset.'

Wil.[1] n.Wil. 'What's thuc noise?' 'Aw, they be a hussetting up street' (E.H.G.).

Hence Wooseting, vbl. sb., see below.

Wil. The ceremony of 'wooseting' is the same as in a 'skimmeting,' and expresses popular disapproval of adultery, N. & Q. (1873) 4th S. xi. 225.

HOOSH, sb. and v.[1] Irel. [hūʃ.] 1. sb. A lift, heave, push upwards.

13. A legal term; gen. in phr. put to the horn, declared a criminal; see below.

Sc. To 'put to the horn' was almost a proverbial expression, and came from one of the recognised statutory Acts. . . The theory of law which gave rise to this process of horning was that the debtor who failed to obey the Royal summons to pay his debt was to be treated as a rebel against authority, and when he had been 'put to the horn' he could be thrown into prison, though he had to be maintained there not by the State, but by the creditor. This could not be done, however, until the debtor was duly warned and given a certain time to pay. If that was overrun the Horning Office officials proceeded to the cross of the burgh or county town, read letters of denunciation against the debtor, and then followed that up by three blasts on a horn, and by the affixing of the letters to the cross. This practice . . . has long since fallen into desuetude, Scotsman (June 28, 1899). Bnff. 'At the horn,' on the verge of bankruptcy (Jam.). Abd. She rung the bell instantly on her servants to put him to the horn, Shirrefs Poems (1790) 305. Dmb. Glad to catch him with your poind and horn, Salmon Gowodean (1868) 63. Ayr. I'll be put to the horn whenever it's kent, Service Notandums (1890) 60. Lnk. [They] Will be harry't wi' taxes, an' put to the horn, Hamilton Poems (1865) 46. Edb. Your horn and caption and sic gear, Liddle Poems (1821) 243. Gall. I had been put to the horn—that is I had been proclaimed rebel and outlaw at the Cross of Edinburgh with three blasts of the king's horn, Crockett Grey Man (1896) vi.

HORSAM, sb. Obs. n.Yks. A small tax; see below.

A small tax which is still paid (though the intention of it has long since ceased) by the townships on the north side of the vale, and within the lathe or wapentake of Pickering, for horsemen and hounds kept for the purpose of driving off the deer of the forest of Pickering from the cornfields which bordered upon it. When that field of a given township which lay next the forest was fallow, no tax was due from it that year; and though this forest has long been thrown open, or disforested, and the common fields now inclosed, the 'sauf year' (calculating every third year) is still exempt from this imposition, Grose (1790); Marshall Rur. Econ. (1788).

15. Dried flags or peat cut for fuel.

e.An.[1]; e.An.[2] Differing from turves, in being the upper cut with the grass, reeds, &c. Nrf. We used to burn dry cow dung an' hovers, PATTERSON Man and Nat. (1895) 61; Peat cut into blocks 4 in. sq. and 2 ft. deep, Leg. Broads, iv; COZENS-HARDY Broad Nrf. (1893) 17.

Hence Hover-spade, sb. a tongue-shaped spade for cutting turf. e.An.[1]

16. adj. Of the wind: blowing up for rain. Sur.[1]

HOVER, adj.[2] and v.[2] s.Cy. Ken. Sur. Sus. Hmp. Also in form huvver Ken. Sus. [o·və(r), ʉ·və(r).]

1. adj. Light, puffy, raised; not pressed down.

Ken. Used of bread, also of hops just gathered and not pressed down (J.A.B.); Ken.[1], Sur.[1]

2. Of soil: light, loose, gen. in comp. Hover-ground.

s.Cy. GROSE (1790). se.Cy. RAY (1691). Ken. As the land on the upper part of the island [Thanet] is generally light and hover, the wheat, especially in a dry season, is apt to be what they call root-fallen, YOUNG Annals Agric. (1784–1815) XXVII. 516; Ken.[2], Sus.[12]

3. Cold, shivery, hunched up; of birds or animals: having the coat or feathers ruffled from cold; poorly, unwell.

Ken.[1] Sur.[1] His coat is so hover. Sus.[1] Some of the children looked middlin' hover as they went along to school this morning through the snow. [Birds [in frost] creep about with all their feathers starting and ruffled—'hover,' as the country people call it, Sat. Review (1891) LXXI. 99.]

4. v. To spread lightly or loosely; in hop-picking: to pack hops lightly, to measure them lightly into the basket.

Ken. 'To hover ground,' to lay it on lightly (K.); Have they been hovered? (S.H.); To pack lightly, in order to defraud in measure. The hop pickers, who are paid by the basket, lay them lightly in for that purpose, GROSE (1790); Ken.[1] In e.Ken. it is the custom to pick, not in bins, but in baskets holding five or six bushels. The pickers gather the hops into a number of small baskets or boxes, until they have got enough to fill the great basket; they then call the tallyman; .. one of the pickers ... then comes to hover the hops; this is done by putting both hands down to the bottom of the great basket, into which the hops out of the smaller ones are emptied as quickly but gently as possible, the woman all the while raising the hops with her hands; as soon as they reach the top, they are quickly shot out into the green bag before they have time to sag or sink. Thus, very inadequate measure is obtained, as, probably, a bushel is lost in every tally; indeed, hovering is nothing more than a recognized system of fraud. Sus. To spread hay loosely (F.E.S.); Sus.[12]

5. With in: to cover with straw or matting, &c. Hmp. (H.C.M.B.) 6. To huddle.

Ken. Huvvered up under the wall. All huvvered together (D.W.L.).

HOWLING, vbl. sb. Sus. In comb. Apple-howling. The custom of 'wassailing' orchards; see below. Cf. apple-owling, sb., howlers.

The custom of wassailing the orchards still remains. It is called apple-howling. A troop of boys visit the different orchards and encircling the apple-trees they repeat the following words: 'Stand fast root, bear well top, Pray the God send us a good howling crop. Every twig, apples big, Every bough, apples enow, Hats full, caps full, Full quarters, sacks full.' They then shout in chorus, one of the boys accompanying them on the cow's horn; during the ceremony they rap the trees with their sticks, N. & Q. (1852) 1st S. v. 293.

Hence Howling-boys, sb. pl. the boys who carry out the custom of 'howling.'

1670, Dec. 26. I gave the howling boys 6*d.*, Arch. Coll. I. 110, in Sawyer Flk-Lore (1883) 20.

4. Phr. out of one's hundred, strange, out of one's element. e.An.[1]

5. The long hundred, six score; a number varying according to the articles counted; a measure of ground large enough to grow six score plants.

Or.I. A measure of garden-ground in Orkney 15 ft. by 18 ft. in extent: ground sufficient for the growth of a hundred plants of kail. In each plot or hundred the plants are set 18 inches apart, or in ten rows of twelve each. Hundred, therefore, means the long hundred or six score (JAM. Suppl.). s.Wor.[1] Long, by machine weight, 112 lb.; by count, six score = 126; e.g. a hundred of asparagus, of oranges, of walnuts, &c., would be 126. Nrf. Six score 'casts' (or pairs) of crabs, i.e. 240, are called a hundred, JARROLD Guide to Cromer, 39; Six score go to the hundred, RYE Hist. Nrf. (1885) xv. Sus. In counting fish 128 herrings make a hundred and 132 mackerel according to Brighton measure, but the reckoning is by warps of 4 fish (F.E.S.). w.Som.[1] A long hundred is six score. . . In markets, when buying by tale, unless 'the hundred of five score' is specially mentioned, the hundred is understood to be one hundred and twenty, now often called 'a long hundred.' [Of balks, deals, eggs, faggots, bunches, &c., gen. 120, MORTON Cyclo. Agric. (1863); STEVENSON in Arch. Review (Dec. 1889) 313 ff.]

Hence Hundredweight, sb. a measure, gen. of 120 lb., but varying in different districts according to the article weighed.

Lan. 100, 112, 120 lbs., MORTON Cyclo. Agric. (1863). Chs. Of cheese and hay: 120 lbs., the long hundred, ib.; Chs.[1] Formerly the long hundredweight of 120 lbs. was in gen. use in Cheshire; and I can recollect the time when the sets of weights at farm-houses were 60 lbs. and aliquot parts of 60. Even now many things are reckoned and sold by the score which is the sixth of the old hundredweight. Many things are sold by the load of 240 lbs. or pack, a term which is frequently heard, and which is in reality two long hundredweights. I think the only article which is still sold by the long hundredweight is cheese; and in weighing cheese a rather curious and ingenious method was adopted which still prevails amongst old-fashioned people. The method was perhaps invented because, before the introduction of weighing machines, it was almost impossible to weigh more than one or two hundredweight at a time on an ordinary pair of scales; perhaps also, because farmers were not very good scholars, and to work a long compound addition sum involving many lines of cwts. qrs. and lbs. would have been a difficult task. The scales, large wooden ones, hung by strong chains, were fixed up in some convenient place, and two 60 lb. weights were put into one scale—representing a hundredweight. Cheeses to equal this as nearly as possible were placed in the other scale, and '1' was scratched upon the wall, or chalked up on the door to show that 1 cwt. of cheese had been weighed. Of course the cheeses might be a few pounds over or under the hundredweight, and to ascertain the difference small paving stones were used instead of small weights. If the cheeses weighed more than one cwt. stones were added to the weights until the scales balanced. These stones were then called cheese and were placed on the floor near the cheese scale. If the cheeses weighed less than 1 cwt., stones were put in the cheese scale until the two scales balanced; these stones were called weights and were put on the floor near the weight scale. This process went on until all the hundredweights of cheese had been weighed; but to avoid having large piles of stones it was customary to add to or deduct from the stones representing cheese as the weighing went on. At the last the stones were weighed against each other, and the difference added to or subtracted from the number of hundredweights recorded on the wall. Occas. 2 cwt. instead of 1 cwt. were weighed at each weighing; but the principle was the same. Stf., Der., Lei. Of cheese, MORTON ib. Shr. Of cheese, Bridgenorth 113 lbs., Shrewsbury 121 lbs., ib. Hnt. Of Leicester cheese, 120 lbs., ib. Cmb. Of cheese, 120 lbs., ib. Ess. Of potatoes, 120 lbs., ib. Ken. Of filberts, 104 lbs., ib. w.Som.[1] One hundred pounds.

6. pl. A game of marbles; see below.

w.Yks.[3] The name of a game at marbles which is carried on till one of the players scores 100, or some higher number agreed upon; at that stage a change takes place in the proceedings. Two or more can play. First they 'taw' up to a hole; if they both get in, they repeat the process till one is left out; the other counts 10; if both fail the nearest goes first. A may now lay his taw about the hole, or fire at the other, on hitting which he counts another 10. He now goes for the hole again, and failing, lies where he happens to stop. If he misses, B from his present position tries to get into the hole, and failing, lies still; but if he reaches the hole he counts 10 and proceeds as A had done. The one who first gets the 100 (or other number) now goes in for his 'pizings,' which performance takes place thus:—The loser, so far, is lying about, and the winner goes back to 'drakes,' and again tries to lodge in the hole, and if he succeeds the game is up. If not, he lies still, and the loser tries for the hole; if he gets in he counts another 10, or if he should succeed in hitting the winner, he scores his adversaries' hundred to his own number, and then goes in for his pizings, as the other had done. In failure of either securing the game thus, the process is repeated at drakes. When, however, the one who is on for his pizings manages to taw into the hole, the game is concluded.

w.Yks., n.Lin. 'O have you seen the Shah, O have you seen the Shah? He lights his pipe on a star-light night, O have you seen the Shah? For a-hunting we will go, A-hunting we will go; We'll catch a fox and put him in a box, A-hunting we will go.' . . The children range themselves in double rank at one end of the room . . . and march down to the other end hand in hand. At the bottom they loose hands and divide, the first rank turning right, the second left, and march back in two single files to the other end again, where they reform as at first, and repeat their manœuvre, singing the verses alternately, Gomme Games (1894) I. 244. Der. Flk-Lore Jrn. I. 386, in Gomme ib. Lin. 'Hunting we will go, brave boys, Hunting we will go; We'll catch an old fox And put him in a box, For a-hunting we will go. Halt! shoulder arms! fire!' . . The . . . game is played by the children walking two and two in a circle round one of their companions, singing. The players then stand facing the child in the centre, and place their hands on their partner's shoulders. After the lines are sung the centre child cries out, 'Halt! Shoulder arms! Fire!' at which words each child kisses his partner. If the commander sees anyone hesitate, or avoid kissing, he runs forward and takes the defaulter's place, leaving him to fill the middle position, Gomme ib. Shr. Burne Flk-Lore (1883) 514. Som. 'Oh, a-hunting we will go, a-hunting we will go; We'll catch a little fox and put him in a box, And never let him go.' . . The Bath game is played by the children standing in two rows facing each other, and clapping hands and singing the verse. At the same time the two children facing each other at the top of the lines join hands and trip down and up between the lines. Their hands are unclasped, and the two children run down the outside of the lines, one running on each side, and meet at the bottom of the lines, where they stand. The two children now standing at the top proceed in the same way: this is continued until all the children have done the same. A ring is then formed, when the children again clap and sing, Gomme ib.

w.Som.[1] The plaster figures carried about for sale by Italians are always 'images.'
2. A wooden figure carved by the fairies in the likeness of a certain person intended to be stolen.
ne.Sc. A man in the parish of New Deer was returning home at night. On reaching an old quarry . . . he heard a great noise. . . He listened and his ear caught the words, 'Mak' it red cheekit and red lippit like the smith of Bonnykelly's wife.' He knew at once what was going on and what was to be done, and he ran with all his speed to the smith's house and 'sained' the mother and her baby—an act which the nurse had neglected to do. No sooner was the saining finished than a heavy thud, as if something had fallen, was heard outside the house opposite to the spot where stood the bed on which the mother and her baby lay. On examination a piece of bog-fir was found lying at the bottom of the wall. It was the image the fairies were to substitute for the smith's wife, Gregor Flk-Lore (1881) 62.
3. A figure of clay or wax used in witchcraft.
w.Sc. It is a very old belief that those who had made compacts with the devil could afflict those they disliked with certain diseases, and even cause their death, by making images in clay or wax of the persons they wished to injure, and then, by baptising these images with mock ceremony, the persons represented were brought under their influence, so that whatever was then done to the image was felt by the living original. The custom, not yet extinct, of burning persons in effigy is doubtless a survival of this old superstition, Napier Flk-Lore (1879) 77.
4. A thing supposed to adorn a room.

ISABELLA, sb. Yks. Stf. Der. Not. Lin. Brks. Lon. Ken. Sur. Sus. Hmp. Wil. Also in form Isabellow Yks. Not. Lin. A game played by young people. See below.

[Var. verses are sung while the game is being played, varying slightly from those given under Wil.] Yks. GOMME Games (1894) I. 253. Stf. The centre child pretends to be weeping; another child stands outside the ring and goes to it; when the two meet they kiss, ib. 255. n.Der. A ring is formed of young men and women, a young man being in the centre. He chooses a young woman at the singing of the fifth line, and then joins the ring, the girl remaining in the centre, ib. Lin. ib. 253. Brks. A ring is formed by the children (boys and girls) joining hands. Another child stands in the centre. The ring of children walk round while singing the verses. The singing is confined to the ring. When the centre child is told to 'choose' she selects a boy from the ring, who goes into the centre and they stand together. At the next verse these two children walk out of the ring arm-in-arm. When the next verse is sung they return, and again stand in the centre. At the next verse the boy pretends to put a ring on the girl's finger. They walk out of the ring when told to go to church (two children in the ring unclasping hands to let them walk out, and again clasping hands after they return), and kiss each other and shake hands when the two next verses are sung. The child who was first in the centre then joins the ring, and the game proceeds in the same way with the second child, who chooses in his turn. In the Fernham and Longcot version the one child leads the other out of the ring at 'go to church' with a graceful half-dancing motion, and back again in the same way, ib. 255. Lon. A handkerchief was laid on the ground and the two children stood on each side of it and clasped hands across it, ib. Ken. [Name Arabella used instead of Isabella], ib. 251. Sur. ib. 255. Sus. ib. 250. Hmp. [Name Elizabella], ib. 250, 253. Wil. 'Isabella, Isabella, Isabella, Farewell! 'Say your prayers, love,' &c. 'Put your ring on,' &c. 'Come back, love,' &c. 'Roast beef and plum pudding,' &c. 'For our dinner to-day Kiss together, love,' &c., H. S. May ib. 249; The two children in the centre sing the verse 'Roast beef and plum-pudding.' They stand face to face, take hold of each other's hands, and sway their arms from side to side. The ring then sing the concluding verse. In those versions where 'say your prayers' and 'kneel down' occur, the two centre children kneel, and hold their open hands before them to imitate a book, ib. 255.

4. To trim up the small branches of a tree or hedge. n.Cy. (HALL.), Chs.[123]

JAG(G, see Jeg.

JAGG, sb. Sc. See below. Also called jougs (q.v.).

The jagg or jougs consisted of an iron collar fastened by a padlock, which hung from a chain secured in the church wall near the principal entrance. An offender sentenced to the jagg was compelled to stand locked within this collar for an hour or more before the morning service on one or more Sundays, ANDREWS Bygane Ch. Life (1899) 113.

JAGGER, sb. Sc. Nhb. Dur. Cum. Wm. Yks. Chs. Der. Lin. Shr. Also in forms jaager, jager Sh.I.; jigger Der.[2] nw.Der.[1]; yaager Sc. (JAM.); yagger Sh.I. (JAM.) [dʒa'gə(r, Sh.I. also jā'gər.] 1. A travelling pedlar; a hawker, esp. a fish-hawker.

Sc. The name 'jagger' is applied to a pedlar, or the bearer of a wallet or leather bag called a 'jag,' Yks. Wkly. Post (Dec. 24, 1898); (JAM.) Sh.I. 'I am a jagger,' . . replied . . . a stout, vulgar little man, who had indeed the humble appearance of a pedlar, called jagger in these islands, SCOTT Pirate (1822) v; The word . . . properly signifies a person who purchases goods, chiefly fish, contracted for by another (JAM.); Dey wir sic a hubble wi' boys, jaagers, an' men, Sh. News (July 15, 1899).

2. A boat, which takes the first catch of herrings to land in the deep-sea fishing.

Sh.I. The doggers attached to them [herring busses], named also Jaggers or Yaggers, were swifter sailers, being intended to run home with the herrings first caught. After the Jaggers are all dispatched, the busses continue fishing till they make up cargoes, HIBBERT Desc. Sh. I. (1822) 215, ed. 1891.

Hence Jager-steamer, sb. a steamer for the transport of herrings.

Sh.I. There might have been from 100 to 120 of the Dutch craft in. No Germans at that epoch, and no booms, nor jager steamers, Sh. News (June 25, 1898).

3. A carter or carrier, esp. a man who makes his living by carting for other people; one who sells coals in small loads. See Jag(g, v.[1] 7.

n.Cy. (HALL.) Cum. A carrier, when loads were carried on the backs of horses. The word was never applied to a carrier in carts here. It is seldom heard now; but a road on Stanemore by which pack-horses used to travel is still called 't'jagger rwoad' (M.P.). Chs. A poor labourer that carries coal from the pits in Flintshire to Chester market, on a small horse (K.); Chs.[1 3] s.Chs.[1] For the horse in best condition owned by huxters or coal-jaggers residing at Threapwood, Worthenbury, or Shocklach, Advt. of Flower Show (1886). n.Lin. You're the best jagger that ever run'd round Wivilby Green, PEACOCK R. Skirlaugh (1870) III. 229. Shr.[1] So John Ivans is turned jagger, I 'ear! Shr.[2]

4. A pack-horse driver.

Dur. GIBSON Up-Weardale Gl. (1870). n.Yks.[3] Der. N. & Q. (1876) 5th S. v. 474; Der.[2], nw.Der.[1]

Hence Jagger-horse, sb. a pack-horse.

n.Yks.[3] Der. N. & Q. (1876) 5th S. v. 474.

5. A carrier of ore from the mine to the smelting-mill.

Der. Until the introduction of wheel carriages in the Peak . . . the only mode of conveying goods and merchandise from one part of this country to a distance was on the back of pack-horses, or, as they were here called, 'jagger-horses,' and the drivers or conductors, 'jaggers.' These jaggers were employed in conveying lead ore from Eyam, and mines in the locality, to the smelting-houses in the neighbourhood of Sheffield, returning at night loaded with sacks of coal, N. & Q. (1876) 5th S. v. 474; GROSE (1790) MS. add. (M.); Der.[1 2], nw.Der.[1]

Hence Jagger-galloway, sb. a pony with a peculiar saddle for carrying lead, &c.

N.Cy.[1], Nhb.[1] Obs. Cum., Wm. A 'jagger-galloway' may yet be heard of as employed in the mining districts (M.P.).

6. A small dealer in hay.

Der. The word 'jagger' is used in the Peak, not confined to a person who sells cartloads of coals. I have heard it gen. applied to men who purchased hay, and then carted it for sale to Manchester or Stockport—such a man is called a 'hay jagger,' N. & Q. (1877) 5th S. viii. 518; Der.[2], nw.Der.[1]

JAGGET, sb. n.Sc. (JAM.) [Not known to our correspondents.] A full sack or pocket, hanging awkwardly, and dangling at every motion.

JAGGLE, v. Yks. Shr. Also in form jiggle w.Yks.[2] [dʒa·gl, w.Yks. dʒe·gl, dʒi·gl.] 1. To cut badly and unevenly. Cf. haggle, v.[1] w.Yks.[5] Shr.[1] Them scithors mun gŏŏ to Soseb'ry to be grond —jest look 'ow they jagglen the stuff—somebody's bin nōsin' an' tāylin' faib'ries ŏŏth 'em.

2. To shake; to move from side to side.

w.Yks.[2] When machinery gets loose and begins to jaggle it is time to fetch the engineer.

3. To quarrel, jangle.

w.Yks. Ta set things square wi ivvriboddy, an save onny hagglin an jagglin at mud spring up ameng em, TOM TREDDLEHOYLE Bairnsla Ann. (1868) 3; w.Yks.[2] I don't like your hagglin', jagglin' ways.

JAIBLE, see Jabble, v.

JAIL, sb. and v.[1] Sc. Also in form jile Abd. 1. sb. In phr. a month of the jail, a month's imprisonment.

Ayr. Only gied the creature a month o' the jail, HUNTER Studies (1870) 24.

2. v. To put in prison.

Abd. Fat'll they dee wi' 'im? Will they jile 'im? ALEXANDER Ain Flk. (1882) 121; To apprehend and jail me, I gi'e ye 'llowance, ANDERSON Poems (1826) 90. Slg. Bess, Who jail'd her eighteen years, GALLOWAY Poems (1792) 58. Rnf. Jail him till his hindmost plack Is paid to them, M[c]GILVRAY Poems (ed. 1862) 104. Lnk. Ye can jail me, banish me, hang me gin ye please, but naething will cross my lips, FRASER Whaups (1895) 122. Gall. They can only tak' an' jail me, KERR Maggie o' the Moss (1891) 73.

Hence Jailing or Jileing, sb. imprisonment.

Abd. An' wud it be a fine or jilein than? ALEXANDER Johnny Gibb (1871) xxiii. Edb. Gie them routh for toilin' for it, Ye'll see less jailin', LIDDLE Poems (1821) 81.

JAIL, v.[2] Cor. Also written jaale Cor.[2]; jale. [dʒēl.] To walk fast, hurry along.

He ran up the granite-strewn hillside 'like wan jailin' off to a wreck,' PEARCE Esther Pentreath (1891) bk. I. iii; I jaaled after un. He keeped on jaalin hum, HIGHAM Dial. (1866) 11; But I must be jaleing-along, O'DONOGHUE St. Knighton (1864) xiii; Cor.[1] Where be 'ee jailing? Cor.[2 3] w.Cor. They were leading and jailing uplong (A.L.M.).

Don. 'By Jaimminty yis!' says Billy, clappin' his hands, MACMANUS Billy Lappin, in Century Mag. (Feb. 1900) 605.

JAIP, JAIRBLE, see Jaup, v.[1], Jirble, v.[2]

JAISTER, sb. n.Cy. Nhb. Dur. [dʒē·stər.] Swagger, pride of manner and gait. See Gester.

n.Cy. Aw's gat a canny maister, Ayon, Ayon, Aw ken him by his jaister [gesture], Ayon, Ay (W.T.). s.Dur. He hes a lot o' jaister about him (J.E.D.).

Hence Jaistering, ppl. adj. swaggering, gesturing, gesticulating.

N.Cy.[1] It is common to call a person of an airy manner, if a male, 'a jaistering fellow'; and, if a female, 'a jaistering jade.' Nhb.[1], Dur.[1]

[The same word as lit. E. gesture.]

JAKE, see Jauk.

JAKES, sb. Som. Dev. Cor. [dʒēks.] 1. Human excrement.

w.Som.[1] Very common. 'Zee where you be going, else you'll sure to tread in the jakes.' The word rather implies a considerable quantity, such as that found at the back of a privy; not the privy itself. nw.Dev.[1]

2. A state of dirty mess or untidiness; a mess, confusion. Also used fig.

w.Som.[1] The snow have made a proper jakes of my work to-night. Dev. Ef yū'd azeed tha jakes 'er made wi' thickee there pudden, yū widden ayte wan mossel aw'n, HEWETT *Peas. The side of the frame of a doorway. This is a technical word in the West, and is never used to express the door-post or durn-blade. When the frame to which a door is fastened is made of square, solid wood, the whole frame is called a pair of durns (q.v.); but when it is of flat shape, or, as it is sometimes called, 'linings,' then the whole door-frame is a pair of jambs, of which each side is a jamb. 'Will you have the doors fixed with jambs or durns?' Cor. The house could be entered on hands and knees alone, between granite jambs under a granite lintel, Baring-Gould Curgenven (1893) xlvii.

Hence Jamb-stone, sb. the side-stone of a door or window.

w.Sc. Flk-Lore Rec. IV. 274, in Gomme Games (1894) 261. s.Sc. One version represents Janet as at the well instead of upstairs, and afterwards at the mill, &c., Chambers Pop. Rhymes (1890) 141. Edb. Janet lies on her back behind the scenes. The father and mother stand up to receive the visits of the lover, who comes forward singing: 'I'm come to court Janet jo. . . How's she the day?' Mother and father: 'She's up the stair washin'. . . Ye canna see her the day.' The lover retires and again advances and . . . receives similar evasive answers from Janet's parents, who successively represent her as bleaching, drying, and ironing clothes. At last they say: 'Janet jo's dead and gane,' &c. She is then carried off to be buried, the lover and the rest weeping. She sometimes revives, and sometimes not, as Janet herself chooses, ib. 140. Kcb. In the Stewartry of Kcb. 'Janet Jo' is a dramatic entertainment amongst young rustics. Suppose a party has met in a harvest or winter evening, . . and it is resolved to have 'Janet Jo' performed. Two undertake to personate a goodman and goodwife; the rest a family of marriageable daughters. One of the lads, the best singer of the party, retires, and equips himself in a dress proper for representing an old bachelor in search of a wife. He comes in, singing: . . 'I'm come to court Janet jo,' &c. The goodwife sings: 'What'll ye gie for Janet jo?' &c. Wooer: 'I'll gie ye a peck o' siller,' &c. Goodwife says: 'Gae awa', ye auld carle.' . . The wooer hereupon retires, . . . but soon re-enters singing: 'I'll gie ye a peck o' gowd,' &c. . . . At his next entry he offers 'three pecks o' gowd,' at which the goodwife sings: 'Come ben beside Janet jo,' &c. The suitor then advances gaily to his sweetheart, and the affair ends in a scramble for kisses, ib. 141–2.

JANGLE, v.[1] and sb.[1] Sc. Lakel. Yks. Lan. Chs. Lin. War. Shr. Oxf. e.An. Som. [dʒa·ŋl, dʒæ·ŋ(g)l.] 1. v. To quarrel, wrangle, argue angrily.

The memory of Dunbar's legal proceedings at Jedburgh, is preserved in the proverbial phr. Jeddart Justice, which signifies trial after execution, SCOTT Border Minstrelsy (1803) Pref. lvi (JAM.). s.Sc. Jeddart justice—hang first, and judge after, WILSON Tales (1836) II. 137. Slk. 'To Jeddart they hauled the auld miller wi' speed, An' they hangit him dead on a high gallows tree; An' afterwards they in full counsel agreed That Rob Riddle he richly deserved to die.' This alludes to an old and very common prov., 'That such a one will get Jeddart Justice,' HOGG Poems (ed. 1865) 67. N.Cy.[1] (b) Sc. I have a different account given of Jeddart Justice. It is said to signify either a general condemnation, or a general acquittal. Twenty or thirty persons . . . having been brought to trial here at once, it was previously resolved that they should have a common fate. One of the assize, to whose lot it fell to give the casting voice, having fallen asleep, as he was rather in a bad humour at being disturbed, on the question being put to him, is said to have replied to the Judge, 'Hang them a'' (JAM.). (5) Gall. Ye shall never dee, auld lad, By 'Jeddart law,' KERR Maggie o' the Moss (1891) 51. Nhb.[1] (6) Sc. (21) n.Yks. Swainson ib. 75; n.Yks.[3] (22) Ant. In playing this game the children form themselves into two parties. The first consists of Jinny with her father and mother. Jinny, who is a very small child, is concealed behind her parents. All the other children form the party of suitors. The children retire some little distance off, and then approach Jinny's 'house,' saying: 'We've come to court Jinny Jo, Jinny Jo, Jinny Jo, We've come to court Jinny Jo, Is she within?' . . The father and mother . . . sing in answer: 'Jinny Jo's washing clothes, washing clothes. washing clothes, You can't see her to-day.' The visiting party, who are holding hands, retire slowly, walking backwards, while all sing: 'So fare ye well ladies, O ladies, O ladies, So fare ye well ladies, and gentlemen too.' The suitors return immediately singing as before, and this is repeated a number of times: each time they receive an excuse that Jinny is 'drying clothes,' 'starching clothes,' 'ironing clothes,' &c., till at last the parents . . . announce . . . that: 'Jinny Jo's lying dead, Lying dead, lying dead, Jinny Jo's lying dead, you can't see her to-day. . . So turn again ladies,' &c. But instead of going to their own homes again, the suitors remain and sing: 'What shall we dress her in? Dress her in, dress her in? What shall we dress her in? Shall it be red?' . . The . . . parents answer: 'Red's for the soldiers, The soldiers, the soldiers, Red's for the soldier's, And that will not do.' Various other colours are suggested . . . but found unsuitable, . . . till at last white is named, and the parents sing: 'White's for the dead people, The dead people, the dead people, White's for the dead people, And that will just do.' Then the father and mother step aside, and Jinny is seen lying quite still. . . The funeral must be arranged; when suddenly Jinny comes to life again, and springs up, when the play ends amid wild rejoicing, N. & Q. (1891) 7th S. xii. 492. 6. pl. The spangles or beads attached to a lacemaker's bobbins.

Nhp.[1] An appropriate name, from the sound produced by the movement of the bobbins. Not altogether useless ornaments, as is gen. imagined, as they give additional weight to the bobbins, and thereby tighten the stitches and give firmness to the texture of the lace; Nhp.[2] These jingles are more for ornament than use, and are adopted from an ambition to make the pillow look smart. Old coins are frequently used for this purpose; hence that eyesore to antiquaries, the perforation through the rim.

7. A string of glass beads. Dev., Cor. (R.H.H.)

8. v. Phr. to jingle and jangle, to wrangle, quarrel.

(1) s.Wm. (J.A.B.) (2) n.Stf. A circle is formed by joining hands and two children stand in the centre. They walk round [singing]. . . The two in the centre each choose one child from the ring, thus making four in the centre. . . The two who were first in the centre then go out and the game begins again, with the other two players in the centre, Gomme Games (1894) 287; At Cheadle . . . this game is played by grown-up men and women, ib. (3) w.Yks. A number of children stand against a wall, and a row of other children face them. They walk backwards and forwards singing. . . Then the children who are standing still (against the wall) answer by singing. . . The moving line of children take 'Mary' and dance round, singing, Gomme ib. 288. Ken. ib. (4) Lan. On the Monday before Good Friday the youths . . . congregate in strange dresses, and visit their friends' houses, playing antics, on which occasion they are styled 'the Jolly Lads,' Harland & Wilkinson Flk-Lore (1867) 227. (5) e.Dur.[1] 'There was a jolly miller, and he lived by himself, As the mill went round he made his wealth; One hand in the hopper (also, "copper"), and the other in the bag, As the mill went round he made his grab (or, "brag").' These are the words they sing when playing. They go, two and two together, round and round, and there is always an odd one in the middle. When they come to the last word 'grab,' he makes a grab, forces another to come out, and takes his place; they then start again, singing as before. w.Yks.[2] Yks., Lan., n.Stf., Not. Gomme ib. 291. Der. Flk-Lore Jrn. I. 385, in Gomme ib. Lei. At Leicester the 'odd' child, or 'miller,' stands outside the wheel or ring, instead of being in the centre, and it is the outside children who change places, Gomme ib. 291. Shr. The players form a circle, not hand in hand, but in pairs, arm in arm; the 'miller' stands alone in the middle. Chorus: 'There was a jolly miller, and he lived by himself,' &c. The miller seizes a girl from among the couples, a scuffle of changing partners ensues, and the one left partnerless becomes the miller, Burne Flk-Lore (1883) 512. Sur. Flk-Lore Rec. V. 86, in Gomme ib. Cor. Flk-Lore Jrn. V. 57, in Gomme ib. [The game requires an uneven number of players. All the children except one stand in couples arm in arm, each couple closely following the other. This forms a double ring or wheel. The odd child stands in the centre. The children forming the wheel walk round in a circle and sing the verse. When they come to the word 'grab,' those children standing on the inside of the wheel leave hold of their partners' arms, and try to catch hold of the one standing immediately in front of their previous partners. The child in the centre (or miller) tries (while they are changing places) to secure a partner and place. If he succeeds in doing this, the one then left out becomes the miller, Gomme ib.] (6, a) Der.[2] None of thy jolly Robins. (b) s.Chs.[1] Yŭr yed)z rùn·in ŭpŭ Jol·i-rob·inz. (7) Der. A long row of children walk to and fro. One child, facing them on the opposite side, represents the Rover. . . [After singing] the Rover skips round the long row, singing. . . He chooses one of them, who goes to the opposite side with him, and the game goes on until all are rovers like himself, Gomme ib. 294. (8) Yks. At Earls Heaton the children stand against a wall in a line. Another child walks up and down singing the verses and chooses a partner. He spreads a handkerchief on the ground and they kneel and kiss, ib. 296. Nhp. The ring walks round, and the child is outside the ring. Partners are chosen, and the two walk round outside the ring. The first two walk together till there is a third, then the three walk together until there is a fourth, then they go in couples. In the version, from Raunds, four boys stand in the centre of the ring. When the verses are sung they choose four girls, and then take their places in the ring. The four girls then choose four lads, and so on, ib. War. The children form a large ring, clasping hands and standing still. One child walks round inside the ring, singing the verses. The child then chooses another from the ring, bending on one knee and kissing her hand. Lines are then repeated, the two walking arm in arm round the inside of the ring. Another child is chosen out of the ring by the one who was chosen previously. This goes on until all are chosen out of the ring, walking two by two round inside. When the ring will no longer hold them, the two walk round outside, ib. Glo. ib. 294. Sus. N. & Q. (1892) 8th S. i. 210. (9) Ken. Science Gossip (1882) 65; (G.E.D.)

Hence (1) Kecker, sb. the bar which connects the body of a cart with the thills; a piece of wood or iron in front of a tumbril to enable the body of a cart to be raised to any angle; (2) Kecker-peg, Kecking-, or Kecko-, sb. a peg placed in the 'kecker' to keep the cart tilted at any angle.
(1) Lan.[1] I.Ma. Others tryin' to draw the kecker, Brown Doctor (1887) 219, ed. 1891. Chs.[1] In the old tumbrils, or dung-carts, there is an arrangement by which the cart can be kept kecked at any angle, so that the dung may be hooked out from behind with a muck-hook as the cart is drawn along the field. The arrangement consists of an upright piece of iron (formerly it was made of wood) attached to the front of the cart framework, which works through a slit in the cart body. It is called the kecker, and is perforated with numerous holes. The body of the cart is hinged to the axle. When the cart is kecked, the front is raised, and a peg is put into one of the holes in the kecker to keep it at the required angle. (2) Chs.[13]

2. Comb. Kek-rod, the peg which keeps the 'kecker' in position.

1. Plenty. Grose (1790) MS. add. (C.)

2. Phr. (1) Kelty's mends, see below; (2) to be cleared kelty off, to have one's glass quite empty; (3) to give one kelty, to force a reluctant drinker to consume a double portion; to persuade an unwilling person to do anything.

(1) Per. Amongst the King's attendants was a trooper . . . celebrated for his ability in drinking. . . Among the laird of Tulliebole's vassals, there was one, named Keltie, equally renowned for the same . . . pre-eminence. The trooper and he . . . agreed to meet early on a Monday morning. . . They continued to drink till the Wednesday evening, when the trooper fell from his seat. . . Keltie took another quaff . . . to show that he was conqueror, and this gave rise to a proverb, well known all over this country, Keltie's Mends, and nothing is more common, at this very day, when one refuses to take his glass, than to be threatened with Keltie's Mends, Statist. Acc. XVIII. 474 (Jam.). (2) Sc. Are ye a' cleared Kelty aff? Fill anither, Scott Rob Roy (1817) xxviii. (3) Sc. Calder *Presbyt. 2. To contend, strive for mastery, compete; esp. of reapers in the harvest-field.

Sc. It was common for the reapers, on the last day of their business, to have a contention for superiority in quickness of dispatch, groups of three or four taking each a ridge, and striving which should soonest get to its termination. In Sc. this was called a kemping, CHAMBERS Bk. Days (1869) II. 377; The dragon's teeth are sown; . . there will be an awful day's kemping at the shearing of them, SCOTT Nigel (1822) xxvii. Sh.I. Aa body kjempin' wha hiechest sall win, Sh. News (Nov. 6, 1897); S. & Ork.[1] MS. add. Cai.[1] Obsol. Elg. His kindly voice bids a' come near; Soon strip'd 's the kemping field, COUPER Poetry (1804) I. 163. Abd. Their hyeucks had kempit side by side through the hairst, ALEXANDER Notes and Sketches (1877) 18. Fif. Rapidly gleamed the hyucks in sturdy hands when some forward shearer began kempin, COLVILLE Vernacular (1899) 13. e.Fif. I to the kempin' again like mad until the sweat was workin' through the band o' my breeks, LATTO Tam Bodkin (1864) xxix. Dmb. Who's kemped wi' you, as I've done, years a score, Has little left I trow to tremble for, SALMON Gowodean (1868) 9. Rnf. Night and day with mine I'll kemp, FINLAYSON Rhymes (1815) 115. Ayr. The real enthusiasm, sometimes in kemping, that universally prevailed on the hairst-rig, WHITE Jottings (1879) 49. Edb. Kemp away till it be dark, Wi' a' their might, CRAWFORD Poems (1798) 43. Bwk. Kempin' fast and fierce; For deils are they for shearin' here, The lasses o' the Merse, HENDERSON *Pop. KERVE, v. and sb. Sh.I. n.Cy. Nhb. Dur. Yks. Also written curve Nhb.; kterv Sh.I.; kirve Nhb.[1] Dur. w.Yks. [kerv, kirv, kāv.] 1. v. To cut, esp. to cut or undermine a seam of coal.

N.Cy.[1] The first operation in preparing a jud in a coal mine for blasting, is the removal of a large portion of the foundation of the block; the expansive action of the gunpowder detaching the remainder in large masses. Nhb. Bill Simpson, stripped bare to the waist, Lay curving on the thill, Proudlock Borderland Muse (1896) 100; Nhb.[1], w.Yks. (S.K.C.), w.Yks.[2] [Reports Mines.]

Hence (1) Kerving, sb. (a) a wedge-shaped excavation, made by the hewer with his pick at the lower part of the seam, previous to blasting; (b) the operation preparatory to bringing down the 'jud' or top in a coal-mine; (2) Kirvin and nickin, phr., see (1, b).

(1, a) Nhb., Dur. The coals obtained from the kirving are always small; and as the size of the kirving is pretty constant and irrespective of the thickness of the seam, it follows that a greater percentage of small is made in working a thin than a thick seam of coal, the hardness of the two seams being similar, Greenwell Coal Tr. Gl. (1849). [Reports Mines.] (b) w.Yks.[2] Kerving is equivalent to 'hoiling,' an operation which consists in making a hole with a pick under the seam, before the wedges are put in at the top, whereby the mass of coal is brought down. (2) Nhb. For what he gat was varry sma', Frae out the kirvens and the nickens, Wilson Pitman's Pay (1843) 27; Nhb.[1] A nick is made down each side of the coal 'face,' and these deep grooves are called the nickins; then a deep wedge-shaped groove is carved or cut at the floor level called the kirvin.

2. sb. A cut, an incision.

Sh.I. Pit a kierv i' yon hert wi' da knife, afore doo pits him i' da kettle, Sh. News (Dec. 25, 1897).

[1. OE. ceorfan, to cut, esp. to cut stone (Sweet).]
